

Art Winner, 14, Learns Responsibility on Route

The large number of youngsters who won gold keys for their impressive art exhibits at Brandeis Store this week are the gifted.

They are in the words of Dean Donald Emery of the University of Omaha the ones who must not be mediocre, must not yield to the temptation to "just get by."

One representative of this group is Thomas Lewis, Jr., 14, seventh grader at Howard Kennedy School.

His tempera painting of a landscape is not the only work for which he has been praised recently.

Leonard Palmquist, manager of World-Herald Station B, 2513 North Twenty-fourth Street, said Thomas is "an exceptional kid" as a newspaper carrier.

Thomas has carried papers about six months. He said the route "teaches me how to be friendly, nice to my customers. It teaches me how to take responsibilities."

Thomas wants to be a serious artist. Art is his best study, gradewise. His favorite is arithmetic. He collects marbles, plays baseball and swims.

He said he tries to make a painting "as colorful as I can" and tries "to make things back in the scene look as far back on the paper as I can."

He didn't expect to win the key. "I thought the teacher didn't enter my work," he said. "I thought she forgot."

* * *

—World-Herald Photo.

Thomas . . . 'Exceptional.'

11 students at St. Joseph High School. The students:

Joseph Cepuran, John Dziedzic, Dennis Spicl, Constance Caniglia, Martha Hladek, Frances Sasek, John Stefan, Charles Turco, Rosary Constantini, Barbara Pankowski and Lu Anne Puglici.

Thomas Wais, president of the NHS Archbishop Bergan Chapter, presided at the induction. Citations were read by the Rev. Bernard Koebele, OSM.

* * *

Any Actors?

Upperclass high school